These offcers draw half the regular pay of their rank from the British paymasters, al-though their pay from their own treas-ury is said to be several months in arrears.

The men's quarters include one large dormitory hall and several smaller rooms. The men are in big squads, each under a sergeant. Their clothes, furnished by the government, include a dark-blue uniform suit of drill, underwear, handkerchiefs, fezzes, boots, slippers and socks.

In the great hall the authorities have screened off a space for use as a mosque.

Schoolboys Make Money.

The Cincinnati public schools are teaching boys how to do things of practical value. The workshops of the manual training department afford the pupils an opportunity to repair arti-cles of household use brought from their own homes. Articles are also made which have a commercial value One school made sleds from a special design, which were sold at a good

Military Precautions Keep Natives

In another school several boys organized themselves into a regular manufacturing company. They made lamps, inkstands, desk furniture and a number of other small articles and placed them on sale in several stores. One day the mother of one of them bought a unique wooden lamp stand which she showed to her son, saying:

This looks so easy and is so attractive, I should think that you would like to make some like it in the school shop."

shop."
The boy showed her the trade mark upon the bottom, which showed that it had been manufactured by the company of schoolboys of which he was an active member. Although this is Correspondence of the Associated Press.
